

Thriving Teams

Building a Culture of Resilience & Psychological Safety

Why do good teams get stuck in patterns that hold everyone back?

Today's workplaces are full of competing demands, shifting priorities and external uncertainty. Left unaddressed, teams start protecting themselves rather than each other: mistakes get hidden, honest conversations get avoided, and people quietly disengage rather than risk getting it wrong.

This practical, interactive session builds the conditions for psychological safety, trust and resilience, whether that's equipping leaders and managers with strategies to shape team culture, or working directly with an intact team to build clarity and trust together, on the day.

A fully customisable session

What you'll do

You'll start by exploring the four key elements that make teams thrive, then use the Thriving Teams Health Check to assess where your own team actually stands on psychological safety. From there, you'll dig into reframing failure, learning to treat mistakes as information rather than something to hide, using thinking from Black Box Thinking and Growth Mindset.

The session also tackles “high-functioning fear,” the perfectionism, defensiveness and quiet disengagement that show up in teams who look fine on the surface but aren’t. You’ll explore kindful leadership, balancing clarity and compassion, and look at how AI can support clearer communication and a more connected culture. If you’re running this with an intact team, you’ll leave having built real agreements together, not just discussed the theory.

What happens when psychological safety is built

When teams build real psychological safety, everything changes:

- Mistakes become learning moments, not things to hide
- People speak up before small issues become big ones
- Perfectionism and defensiveness ease, replaced by honest, open conversation
- Teams stay engaged and clear, even through uncertainty and change
- Trust and collaboration become how the team works, not just something they aspire to “My confidence as an HR professional and leader has changed. I am undertaking so much of what you recommend.””

Benefits & results

The most immediate benefit is honesty: people leave with a shared language for talking about mistakes, uncertainty and fear without it feeling like a weakness. But the deeper shift is cultural. Once a team has real psychological safety, collaboration, innovation and resilience stop being aspirational and start being how the team actually operates.

What your organisation gets

A team who can navigate change and uncertainty without collapsing into disconnection or defensiveness. Practical tools for communication, boundaries and team agreements, embedded through real situations, not just discussed in theory.

Norgine

"Very useful background and good food for thought for more work to do with my team."

Marc Watson

Why it matters

Thriving teams aren't the ones with the fewest problems, they're the ones with enough safety to actually talk about them.

- Mistakes get hidden, so the lessons in them are lost
- Fear of getting it wrong breeds perfectionism, defensiveness and quiet disengagement
- Uncertainty and change leave people reactive and disconnected, not clear and aligned

"Very thought provoking. Gave me lots of ideas of initiatives to introduce and really helped me identify things that could be better."
